

Body Parts in the Garden

By Kathryn Asbahr

Got your attention, didn't it? Here is the inspiration:

Here's ours.

This is how they start.

These are some old figures from Plasticville Bachmann that either had a base or were just not something I was going to use. The center one was from a package of seated figures from China. All ready and willing to be sacrificed to the cause. I used a saw to separate the halves. The tops will be saved and might be used where you will only see the top of the figure through a window.

Figures were washed and primed then painted. I dusted the ankles and waist with tacky glue and sawdust to look like they were stuffed with straw. Then added another drop of glue and some flowers.

I think these will also appear as Halloween decorations on the front porch of some dwelling. Just add a pumpkin or wild colored grasses.
